Listening & Reading Skills

LISTEN & DRAW

Listening skills are so important! Before you can effectively teach procedures and academic skills, your students need to listen and attend to what you are saying.

DIFFERENTIATION

I recommend doing this as a teacher directed activity in the beginning. You may want to introduce this in a small group setting if your class has a wide range of abilities. You can give different groups different expectations for the writing assignment portion of the activity. There is an extra writing page included for your students who are ready to write a paragraph or story about the picture.

TECHNOLOGY CONNECTION

Once your students are comfortable with the format, you can record the directions or ask a parent volunteer to do it for you. Or ask the drama department at your local middle school or high school if there is a student who is interested in doing this for you. Students are often looking for community service opportunities.

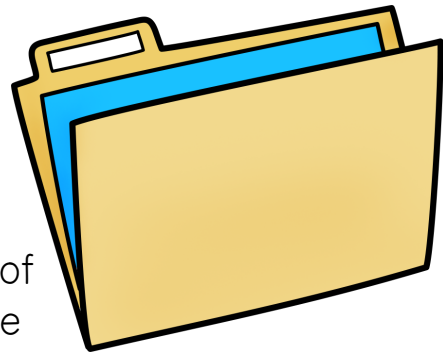

After each step, either pause to give students time to do the work or use some type of noise maker like bell or xylophone. Tell your students to push the "stop" button when he/she hears the sound. Push "go" button after he/she follows the directions and is ready for the next step.

LISTEN & DRAW

INDEPENDENT ACTIVITY

- WRITING & LISTENING CENTER: Once your students understand the format, you can use this to strengthen your students skills independently. You will need:
 - Prerecord directions
 - Electronic device and headphones for students to listen to directions
 - Hang copy of directions at the center (cat with pencil)
 - Copy of assignment
 - Pencil
 - Crayons

TONS OF USES!

- EMERGENCY SUB PLANS: Add one of these lessons to your sub plans for the writing assignment of your plans. Your sub will love that the lesson is quiet and structured.
- R.T.I. DOCUMENTATION: Great way to show proof of listening skills and writing growth over time for R.T.I.
- INSIDE RECESS - FRIDAY FUN DAY: Students will love the art part of these activities. You will love the fact that your students are quiet so they can listen to the directions.
- English as Second Language Learners: E.S.L. / E.L.L. teachers have very nice feedback.
- Grammar Lessons: Use these lessons when teaching prepositions.
- Enrichment: The different themed lessons can be an extension of your social studies, science, or other lessons.
